do. This map takes you on a tour of the 21 projects those who are working with it.

A once derelict area in the heart of London is being transformed. A once derelict space that had a run-down feeling that is hard to recall today. Devised before the introduction of en-suite bathrooms, it relied upon the shared facilities of the ticket hall, from where we can pass into the revamped King’s Cross ticket hall, from where we can pass into the revamped King’s Cross St Pancras, which has six lines running through it, more than any other on the capital’s Underground network. It is time to step inside St Pancras to enjoy some of its hospitality. The Western Transit Shed, which fronts onto Stable Street, is a great railway hotel. You can of course grab a cup of coffee, a glass of wine, a cold beer, a hot meal or a light snack there especially on summer weekends. The Bar is exactly what it sounds like: a bar in the former station ticket hall, from where we can pass into the revamped King’s Cross ticket hall, from where we can pass into the revamped King’s Cross St Pancras, which has six lines running through it, more than any other on the capital’s Underground network.

If we go around the back of the ArtHouse we can walk through a new outdoor open space that is open all year around. The National Skills Centre, designed by David Morley. It will eventually be redeveloped as part of the big picture, but this elegant building will adorn the King’s Cross site. Always intended to be temporary, the ArtHouse has been taken further than most at St Pancras.

From here we turn into King’s Boulevard, a street in a constant state of flux, which hosts the Future Office Bar as a result of the replacement of King’s Cross Central Limited Partnership. This is a creative office bar that was recently opened, with drinks that are served in the same manner as they used to be served in the old King’s Cross Central Limited Partnership. The Future Office Bar is exactly what it sounds like: a bar in the former station ticket hall, from where we can pass into the revamped King’s Cross ticket hall, from where we can pass into the revamped King’s Cross St Pancras, which has six lines running through it, more than any other on the capital’s Underground network.

The ArtHouse gallery is a place of entertainment, with a concentration of such facilities. What makes it particularly bold is that its facilities are out of the ordinary. You can of course grab a cup of coffee, a glass of wine, a cold beer, a hot meal or a light snack there especially on summer weekends.

A grand railway hotel has a great railway hotel. You can of course grab a cup of coffee, a glass of wine, a cold beer, a hot meal or a light snack there especially on summer weekends. The Bar is exactly what it sounds like: a bar in the former station ticket hall, from where we can pass into the revamped King’s Cross ticket hall, from where we can pass into the revamped King’s Cross St Pancras, which has six lines running through it, more than any other on the capital’s Underground network.

A great railway hotel is a great railway hotel. You can of course grab a cup of coffee, a glass of wine, a cold beer, a hot meal or a light snack there especially on summer weekends. The Bar is exactly what it sounds like: a bar in the former station ticket hall, from where we can pass into the revamped King’s Cross ticket hall, from where we can pass into the revamped King’s Cross St Pancras, which has six lines running through it, more than any other on the capital’s Underground network.

A great railway hotel is a great railway hotel. You can of course grab a cup of coffee, a glass of wine, a cold beer, a hot meal or a light snack there especially on summer weekends. The Bar is exactly what it sounds like: a bar in the former station ticket hall, from where we can pass into the revamped King’s Cross ticket hall, from where we can pass into the revamped King’s Cross St Pancras, which has six lines running through it, more than any other on the capital’s Underground network.

A great railway hotel is a great railway hotel. You can of course grab a cup of coffee, a glass of wine, a cold beer, a hot meal or a light snack there especially on summer weekends. The Bar is exactly what it sounds like: a bar in the former station ticket hall, from where we can pass into the revamped King’s Cross ticket hall, from where we can pass into the revamped King’s Cross St Pancras, which has six lines running through it, more than any other on the capital’s Underground network.